Allscripts and Elligo Health Research help physicians to participate in CRO clinical trials as study investigators without high participation costs

CHICAGO, Aug. 17, 2017 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Allscripts (NASDAQ:MDRX) has partnered with Elligo Health Research to assist clinicians to conduct clinical trial studies in their own clinics. Through the Allscripts / Elligo partnership, clinical trials managed by Clinical Research Organizations (CROs) will be available, bringing new treatments to patients across major therapeutic areas.

The combined offering enables physicians to directly participate as study investigators in selected CRO clinical trials, and delivers the physicians' patients the benefit of more direct comprehensive care. Additionally, physicians will be able to generate research revenue and cover investigator fees associated with trial procedures.

The Allscripts eParticipateSM service will be available to all Allscripts clients using the EHR platforms – Allscripts Professional EHRTM, Allscripts TouchWorks[®] EHR and Allscripts SunriseTM.

CROs continue to increase investments to support bringing new clinical therapies to market, with more than $17 billion in payments to study investigators. eParticipate expands the reach of clinical trials investments by enabling Allscripts research-capable sites to become study investigators through Elligo's infrastructure and services. Allscripts physicians will have access to clinical trials across several therapeutic areas, including Gastroenterology, Neurology, Pain, Urology, Pulmonology, Oncology and Women's Health, some of the key areas of focus for CROs.

"By bringing clinical trials directly to their patients, physicians can remain focused on the direct care of patients while offering them new therapies," said Allscripts Senior Vice President and General Manager of Payer and Life Sciences Jay Bhattacharyya. "Physicians will be able to participate in the benefits of clinical research without investing in expensive infrastructure."

"Through our partnership with Allscripts, health care providers can identify patients for potential clinical research opportunities directly through their EHR," said President of Elligo Health Research, Chad Moore. "Not only will patients gain access to treatments they might not have had otherwise, they will also participate from the comfort of their own physician's office."
