The following is a transcript of an interview with Glen Tullman and Phil Pead posted on the www.OneAllscriptsEclipsys.com microsite on June 9, 2010:

Glen Tullman: [00:00:02] This is an amazing day today. It's very exciting because we're merging two great leaders in the healthcare space. Eclipsys, which is a leader in the hospital market, and Allscripts, which is a leader in the ambulatory market, that market for physicians outside the four walls of the hospital. And the nice thing about healthcare is everybody in this country understands that we have a problem. It's a quality problem. It's a cost problem. It's a problem with waste and a problem with safety and the way to address that problem is to use information technology. It's what we've done in every other sector of this economy, except healthcare. And so today by combining these two organizations we create a new leader in the healthcare space.

[00:00:47] What we've done is we've taken two leaders and combined them into one new healthcare leader. So we've taken Eclipsys which is a leading provider of hospital systems and we've combined that with Allscripts which has the same leadership and physician based systems.

Phil Pead: [00:01:05] So when you think about the strategic rationale, you now have about a hundred and eighty thousand physicians connected to about fifteen hundred hospitals and about ten thousand post acute care facilities connecting the patient so that there's essentially a seamless experience between all of their care providers.

Glen Tullman: [00:01:24] We have a market that is very underpenetrated. Less than twenty percent of all the physicians and hospitals actively use - comprehensively use - electronic health records. We have the opportunity to address the rest of that market - that eighty percent. And along comes the government and injects through the American Recovery and Reinvestment act – almost thirty billion dollars to encourage physicians and hospitals to adopt the technology that we happen to sell. So now you have an underserved market, you have funding, and you have physicians who are ready to make the change to transform healthcare.

Phil Peard: [00:02:04] The unique part of this transaction's merger of these two leaders results in, in essence, one platform, one network, and one patient. And what I mean by that is, if you just take the one network for a moment, I mentioned earlier that you're bringing together a hundred and eighty thousand physicians, fifteen hundred hospitals, and about ten thousand post acute facilities. Healthcare is all about connecting venues of care so that when the patient arrives to be treated that all the information associated with that patient is available to the caregivers at the time that treatment is provided.

Glen Tullman: [00:02:44] Both organizations are leaders today and each organization provides industry leading products that are used by our clients to make a difference in health care and we're going to continue to do that. And we're going to invest more in R&D than we ever have. We're going to continue to have open platforms to connect healthcare together and most important, our people are going to continue to focus on making sure that we deliver world class service.

Phil Peard: [00:03:10] As we move forward our intention is to create value with the clients, with the products our clients have already purchased and be able to grow that into this seamless transition across their entire enterprise integrating both ambulatory and in-patient onto a single platform. And then for the future looking at whole array of additional products that allow this, us, to be able to take advantage of our respective markets in a way that we think is unique to the market.

Glen Tullman: [00:03:40] We expect post merger to accelerate the efforts that we have to make these two great products work together in a seamless fashion and to get to the point where we have an end to end integrated solution to address their needs. In addition, we're very supportive of open platforms and we have two tools that each company is using – a tool called Helios which again makes it easy to integrate third party applications and a tool from Allscripts called Universal Application Integrator. And those two tools again make it easy to connect healthcare.

[00:04:18] I'm very excited about the opportunity that I have to lead this new company as Chief Executive Officer and I'm just as excited about the team that I have working with me. Phil Pead, who is the current President and Chief Executive Officer of Eclipsys will become the new Chairman of our Board and Phil will also be working with me side by side to drive the business forward. Bill Davis, our current Chief Financial Officer, will continue in that role and help me to continue to drive both the profitability and the growth of the company. And Chris Perkins who is the current Chief Financial Officer of Eclipsys will serve the important role of Chief Integration Officer helping to bring these two great companies together.
